Story

Fifteen years ago Bologna set off on a journey to discover the treasures of Marco Polo, leaving behind his baby son Pepper. To this day nobody knows what happened to Bologna.

Present day

The Brickster always said that no jail could hold him, not even his own. He reminds himself of that as he pulls his legs through the hole in the cell wall. "Free at last!" He shouts.

Upon returning he discovered that Lego Island was actually a floating Island held still by a huge anchor. The Brickster decided the perfect plan for getting back at the citizens would be to raise the anchor causing the Island to float to the edge of the Fantasy.

He followed the chain up into Lego Island, eventually reaching a hidden engine room within the Islands core. The engine room contained to great key holes, one of which still contained its key. This was the key to raise the anchor, which The Brickster did with out a second thought. Turning the key caused a massive rumble on Lego Island. The anchor slowly lifted out of the seabed and upwards. Looking at the other keyhole The Brickster noticed the sign reading Engine Ignition. The Brickster got really excited; he could he make the Island float and drive it as well, the poor citizens would be unable stop him this time.

But where was the engine key? The Brickster searched the control room high and low, only to find the Islands engine logbook. Upon opening the book he notices the last entry was made by a Bologna, it reads Performed standard engine checks and removed engine key for save keeping. The Brickster is puzzled to why the log has not been updated for fifteen years?

Waiting till night, the Brickster emerges back on Lego Island, he knows that the person to answer his question would be the ever-knowing Infomaniac. Teamed with some of his finest Brick Bots, The Brickster enters the infocentre. The Infomaniac sees the Brickster and begins to flee through the back door only to run into a Brick Bot, who proceeds to walk him back into the building. The Brickster asks the Infomaniac one thing, where is Bologna? The Infomaniac knows that he has no choice but to answer his question, Bologna left the island fifteen years ago on a quest to recover the treasures of Marco Polo. The Brickster and hits Brick Bots disappear as quick as they came. The Infomaniac is left feeling worried, he decides to phone Pepper and fill him in on what has just happened.

Pepper finding out the news quickly skateboards over to the infocentre. The Infomaniac tells Pepper the full story of how the Island is in fact a floating Island with the ability to travel the seas with its powerful turbine engine, and how the Brickster has set the Island afloat. Pepper asks the Infomaniac about the engine key. The Infomaniac reveals that Peppers father; Bologna was an adventurer who set off in search of the treasures of Marco Polo, he took with him the engine key.
